

END-OF-TERM TEST 3 (Bac Blanc) /4eme Lettres

A-READING COMPREHENSION (15 marks)

Reading Text:

1-A young mother opens her kitchen fridge, taking out mango yoghurt for her 11-year-old son. She calls him to the table three times. When the boy fails to appear, she runs up the stairs to get him. Minutes later, the boy finally enters the living room. Imran is a handsome boy and seems perfectly normal, but when you look closer, you can see hearing aids tucked behind each of his ears. Imran is profoundly deaf.

2-Medically, there is nothing that can be done to cure his disability. It is the same affliction that has struck his teenage cousin, a girl called Myra. Two of the children's uncles also suffer severe deafness. Is this a tragic coincidence or is the family just unlucky? According to Imran's mother, Zuhra, the answer is an emphatic "No".

3-"I married my first cousin, which is why Imran is deaf," she says. "When I started my family I was just a young girl. I had no idea that marrying a close relative would be medically dangerous for any children I had. My parents didn't know either. They were culturally backwards. They emigrated from a rural village in Pakistan and moved here so my father could work and send money back home. Now our son is paying the price of our ignorance."

4-British Pakistanis, half of whom marry a first cousin, are 13 times more likely to produce children with genetic defects than the general population in Britain according to government-sponsored research. One in ten children of cousin marriages either dies in infancy or develops a serious life-threatening disability. The human genetics commission in London says that nowadays it would be up to the couple to decide whether to have a family or seek help through medical technology.

5-"I am not angry with my parents," says Zuhra, "but my father would like my oldest daughter who is 18 and at college, to marry her cousin. He already has a male relative in mind. But I would do everything to avoid it happening." She tidies up the tea table and lets Imran go back upstairs before whispering: "If I had had an inkling that a marriage to my cousin would make my youngest son deaf, I would have never conceived him."
